Top Execs Talk First Jobs

Labor Day has come and gone, which means we have start thinking about work again. We asked some South Florida real estate executives to tell us about their first-ever jobs. (Everybody remembers those jobs, usually more fondly than they deserve.)

CapasGroup founder Brad Capas tells us that his family owned a restaurant in Key West that proved to be more than a first work experience for him . it was a way of life. We lived on the floor above the restaurant, and it seemed like I was always working - washing dishes, busing tables, or doing any number of odd jobs whenever extra hands were needed,+he says. As he got older, the rule was that he had to check in with his dad before going out. On countless occasions I spend the next several hours not on my date, but rather flipping burgers or shucking oysters.+
